Newly Selected Cohort of 24 Mission-Driven Businesses & Non-Profits Will be Equipped to Provide Employment & Training Services for Thousands of SNAP Recipients Nationwide

With funding from the USDA, REDF and partners launch second cohort of organizations to receive customized training to become SNAP E&T partners supporting workforce reentry and economic inclusion.

SAN FRANCISCO, CA (September 20, 2022) – Recognizing the immense need for quality employment and training services for SNAP recipients seeking to reenter the workforce, REDF is in the second year of its Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program Employment and Training (SNAP E&T) Capacity Building Program to prepare employment social enterprises (ESEs) and community-based organizations (CBOs) in becoming SNAP E&T third-party partners.

This year, twenty-four mission-driven organizations across 13 states have been selected to participate in the second year of the Technical Assistance Cohort. Over the course of the next 10 months, participating organizations will receive specialized assistance to create or significantly expand their capacity to support SNAP clients as SNAP E&T third-party partners.

Employment social enterprises (ESEs) are businesses achieving transformative social impact - providing jobs, training, jobs, and support to people breaking through barriers to employment, including justice-impacted individuals who are ready to work but are often shut out of opportunity. With deep expertise and proven practices in helping people to overcome workforce barriers and biases, participating ESEs bring tremendous strengths to the SNAP E&T program, which helps SNAP clients access and succeed in employment.

“REDF is excited to work with another cohort of employment social enterprises and community-based organizations to ensure thousands of people nationwide have access to quality jobs, training, and support as they regain stability during the economic recovery,” said Greg Ericksen, REDF’s Director of Government Partnerships and Policy. “Becoming a SNAP E&T third-party partner enables these businesses and organizations to access a sustainable funding source, expand their capacity, and serve clients more effectively.”

Cohort members will also have the opportunity to collaborate with peers and seasoned SNAP E&T partners, access helpful resources, learn about effective strategies, and share throughout the cohort.

“Inspired by the commitment and progress made by the year one cohort members, SJI is looking forward to supporting this year’s group of employment social enterprises and community-based organizations in accessing the opportunities offered by the USDA’s SNAP E&T program, which benefit their participants through expanded and responsive services,” said SJI’s Senior Consultant, Nick Codd.

“Helping social enterprises access SNAP E&T can be a game changer: it helps individuals access vital nutrition benefits, while supporting worker-serving organizations in expanding capacity,” said Sam Schaeffer, Chief Executive Officer of the Center for Employment Opportunities. “CEO is thrilled to continue its work with REDF & SJI to provide technical assistance so more reentry organizations can benefit from much-needed capacity and resources provided by E&T. With eighty percent of employment social enterprise clients being justice-impacted, we are excited to be able to support our peers and the people they serve.”
The Technical Assistance Cohort is part of a program funded by a $1.2 million grant from USDA’s Food and Nutrition Service to expand employment social enterprises’ capacity to provide on-the-job training and work experience to SNAP participants.
